

We're all different.

But when we visit the doctor, our treatments are often the same. We think one day health care should be tailored for you. This is called precision medicine. And research can help us get there.

Precision medicine is health care that is based on each person. It is made up of three factors:

The All of Us Research Program

All of Us is a new research program. The goal is to learn how differences between us might lead to different types of treatments.

We want one million or more people to join. People who join will share information. This might be about their health, habits, and what it's like where they live. It might also be family history and genetic tests. Researchers will use this to do studies. This may help improve health for everyone.

What kind of information will I give?

You may be asked to:

Top 6 things to know

1. Taking part is free, and won't cost you anything more than a little of your time.

2. All eligible adults in the U.S. can join. You can be involved in the program as much or as little as you like.

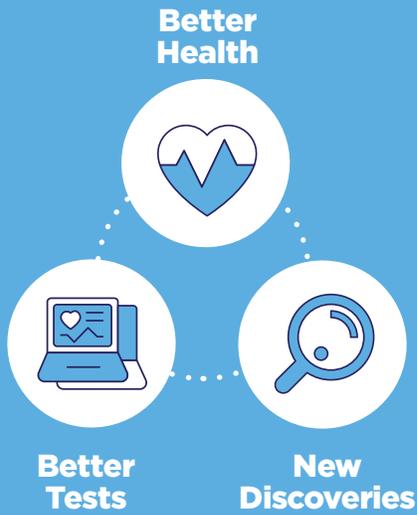

3. If you join you will complete surveys, safely share your medical records, and give a blood and urine sample.

4. The program will last for at least 10 years; we hope you stay in it that long. You can choose to stop taking part at any time. If you do, your access to health care or treatment will not be affected.

5. The program is getting information from different people across the country. This will help researchers learn new things to make discoveries.

6. We keep everything you tell us private and safe.

Why should I join?

Research may help:

- Find the best ways for people to stay healthy.
- Create better tests to see if people are sick or at risk of getting sick.
- Make new discoveries that could advance precision medicine.

Precision Medicine Initiative, P.M.I., All of Us, the All of Us logo, and "The Future of Health Begins with You" are service marks of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.
